The Beecher Trial.

BROOKLYN, APRIL 6, 1875. Through the kindness of one of the jurors who obtained the necessary permission from Chief Justice Neilson I was ed, damasked, diamond-blocked, bird's enabled this morning to gain admission to the Court, in which is now being conducted the famous case of Tilton against Beecher. The rear part of the red, dashes of green, dull blue and gold court room outside the railing, and the color. The overskirt and basque are gallery above was already crowded with made of these fabrics, and the skirt and eager spectators. I was shown to a seat at the Brooklyn reporters' table, situated near the jury box and about 10 feet from the witness' chair. There was a labyrinth of tables and chairs in front and on each side of the judge's platform and these were occupied by newspaper reporters and lawyers. Further out toward the center of the room space was reserved for the friends of those directly concerned in the trial, and who, as fast as they arrived, were ushered to their assigned places and provided with seats. At 11 o'clock Judge Neilson took his seat, and with him came a number of distinguished strangers who were shown to seats on the platform. Mr. Beecher and his family came in at about the same time. After Mrs. Beecher, with her daughter and sons were seated near the center of the room, the defendant walked past the jury box and took the witness' chair. Theodore Tilton and Francis Moulton came in a few minutes later, seating themselves at the end of a long table about a dozen feet away from the witness' staud. Tilton's countenance and demeanor plainly disclosed absorbing interest in this affair of his life. Moulton appeared less concerned, and evidently, from his appearance is not a man to brood over troubles. The three principal actors, as seen together in the Court Room, presented a most remarkable trio.

Beecher's answers were a constant series of solemn denials and point-blank contradictions of the testimony heretofore given by his accusers. These denials were remarkable for concise language and for clear, emphatic utterance. One noteworthy incident of the morning was an argument on the admission of certain testimony, in which passionate speeches were made by counsel on both siles. Evarts opened the contest, speaking with great care and deliberation. He was very earnest, even to the point of acerbity. Fullerton, on the other hand was extremely polite and suasive in addressing the Court. Beach was boldly possesses, in common with the bazaars aggressive, and his voice rang through of the East, its piles of rich brown Tusthe Court room in trumpet tones, when, seh, heaped bale upon bale, in various almost facing the defendant, he asked shades. Spring Fashions. For early spring and cool summer days there is a large display of "suitings," so called from being made up simply with other fabrics in a suit. These are in al wool, broken plaids, extremely soft and fine, of single width, camel's bair ; twilleye and diagonal, in drabs, grays, bluegray, and neutral tinted grounds, with thread-like bars and broken lines of blue, sleeves of silk, the color of the darkest or most prominent dark shade of the plaid These cost 80 cents and $1 a yard. Another yet thinner fabric is a more decided check of white, with brown or drab, all wool, and another thicker, with dark, nearly invisible plaid, with slender bars of blue and of red or black, 45 inches wide, at $1 50 and $1 25 a yard. These fabrics will be admirably adapted for the seaside or mountains. Next comes for spring suits soft all-wool de bege; the threads are much looser in the weaving than those of last year ; another change is in the twill, and in the rough surfaces of some of the late importations. These also show the invisible plaids and broken bars. In single width they cost from 50 cents to $1 a yard. Pongees come again, but fancy a young Quakeress in silvery gray and modest brown suddenly attired in the festal robes of a Murray Hill belle, and see the changes in pongee. The gray grounds are covered with gay plaids, bright Madras colors, maroon and lavender bars and lines, and there are bright laveuder grounds, with fine lines and plaids of purple, white and scarlet. There is besides a large family of imperial serges twilled, silky and serviceable, in all the inevitable shades of beige, browns, grays and ecru. Black is still recognized, however, as the most distingue dress for the street; hence black cashmeres black Siciliennes lose none of their deserved Mr. Evarts was the catechist, and Mr. popularity for wraps and parts of costumes.
